An invisible bridge between the past and the present.

Aïta mon amour is the duo composed of Widad Mjama and Khalil EPI. This collaboration was born out of a fascination that Widad Mjama had for the ancestral Moroccan art of Aïta, a musical genre deeply rooted in the Moroccan countryside and traditionally sung by the Cheikhats.

This contemporary and electronic musical project explores this rich tradition. Aïta mon amour celebrates and honors this oral art to build bridges between the past and the present, deconstruct the perceptions that define the genre, and make it resonate in the contemporary and digital era.

Purity is in the blending. The blending is the pure.

Hirahi Afonso's fingers search for imaginary strings and frets on the instrument he began playing at just five years old. He is one of the most brilliant musicians of today's thriving generation, having redefined traditional Canarian music, making it impossible to consider him a conventional timplista.

In LO PURO, electronic music, folk, flamenco, and rap will resonate —yet always with the timple as the guiding thread. An instrument that, until now, was unknown to most of the artists participating in this project and that now... has become a reality.

Our voices are rooted deep in the earth just as a tree with its strong rough roots.

Ethnical roots, deeply related to the heart of popular south italian folk music, mixed with contemporary electronic sounds of loopstation guitars and synths. Essentially, real voices, multiplied and interwoven into a polyphony that gives rise to a 'timeless' genre, in constant generative collision between the archaic, the popular, and the contemporary. A new concept of vocality, shaped by rough yet enveloping sounds—piercing, brushing against the intimate vocalizations of a reinvented Gregorian chant.

Music for imagined films...

GALGO is the Asturian duo formed by multi-instrumentalist Javier Bejarano and pianist Verónica R. Galán.

Their live performance offers a slow-developing and minimalist experience. The loops and layers that Javier gradually constructs—meticulously crafted with guitar and synthesizers—provide the foundation for the piano motifs introduced by Verónica, as well as for both of their vocals. Their repertoire naturally blends ambient and organic melodies with arid, narrow textures, upon which cinematic scenes are built, guiding the listener into a gentle sonic daydream.

Cry to ancestry, the collision of gnawa and diwan music with the most current sounds.

Coming from the descendants of black sub-Saharan slaves, the cult of geniuses has spread to the Maghreb under various names. Diwan in Algeria, Gnawa in Morocco. Simoh Bouchra and Boualem Fedel bring this repertoire into a contemporary dimension, using new tools and new afroelectro sounds, and to allow the “Maghrebian” identity to embrace modernity while respecting the authenticity of texts and values, such as the transmission, sharing and universality of musical language. Djamra is an exhilarating and powerful music that connects us with the most atavistic part of ourselves.

Barrut a thread stretched across the abyss....

Barrut are seven singers and a percussionist who find the source for their magnetic and wild songs in the vocal polyphonies of the French region of Occitânia. The collective enebriated state to which they lead their audience is called “a thread stretched across the abyss”. A thread that crosses, of course, with breath stolen by the amazing harmonies of these voices that unite and part, they balanced just enough so that no fall is possible. Melodically irresistible, they carry the Mediterranean in the powerful rhythms in which each song is hooked, creating a unique sound environment, like a popular song that can be said to translate the surrounding social environment and nature at every moment.
